

Kaplan Test Prep Surveys Law Schools on the GRE®: No Rush to Accept It

Kaplan Test Prep regularly surveys admissions officers from the nation's 200+ American Bar Association-accredited law schools to ensure that students are receiving accurate and up-to-date information on trends in the law school admissions process. In May 2016, we surveyed them on one of the hottest issues on the admissions landscape: the possibility of the GRE becoming a viable alternative to the LSAT®. As you probably know, the University of Arizona's James E. Rogers College of Law recently began allowing applicants to submit scores from the GRE in lieu of scores from the LSAT. The school says that based on the results of a joint study, it has found the GRE to be effective in measuring prospective students' ability to succeed.

Is your law school considering allowing applicants to submit GRE scores as an alternative to submitting LSAT scores?

How strongly would you support the ABA explicitly stating that the LSAT is the only exam that can be used in admissions?

How familiar are you with the GRE and what it challenges test takers on?

Which exam do you think is more appropriate for law school admissions?

How strongly do you agree or disagree with the following statements about why some law schools might consider accepting the GRE in addition to the LSAT?

Law schools want a more diverse pool of applicants and students.

Law schools are concerned about filling seats because of dropping/stagnant application numbers.

GRE scores don't count towards U.S. News & World Report rankings.
